Nancy: Hi, Liu Tao. What's this?

Liu Tao: Hi, Nancy. It's jiaozi. It's yummy and lots of Chinese like eating it.

Nancy: It looks like half a moon. How do you make it?

Liu Tao: Oh, it's easy.

Nancy: Really? Could you teach me?

Liu Tao: Of course. Look at this. It's filling (饺子馅). I cut up some vegetables and meat and put them in a bowl.

Next, I add some salt and oil, and mix them together.

Nancy: It smells good. What should we do next?

Liu Tao: Look at this. It's wrapper (饺子皮). Put a spoon of the filling on a wrapper and fold the wrapper around the filling.

Nancy: OK. Let me try. Err ... Why? Your jiaozi is cute, but mine is ugly.

Liu Tao: Never mind. Let's do it again.

(After some minutes, Nancy can make jiaozi too. They make lots of jiaozi together)

Liu Tao: Now, let's put jiaozi in the boiling water.

Nancy: Can we eat it now?

Liu Tao: Wait! It will come up to the surface of the water. Then it's time to enjoy the yummy food.

How to make jiaozi
First	Cut up some 60 and meat and put them in a bowl.
Next	61 some salt and oil and mix them together.

It is the Dai's New Year in the middle of the 4th month of Chinese lunar calendar with a 3-day celebration. The first day is the last day of the old year. It's like Chinese New Year's Eve. The second day is called "Kongri". And the third day is the New Year of Dai people. The third day is the happiest day through the whole year.

Dai people think water is lucky. It means best wishes for the New Year. At the Water Splashing Festival, people splash water on every person with all kinds of bucket (桶). Tourists are welcome to join in the festival and some tourists will be surprisingly splashed. So do not bring phones or cameras on the streets during the festival. Enjoy the water and have fun with the friendly Dai people!

Nancy: Hi, Liu Tao. What's this?

Liu Tao: Hi, Nancy. It's jiaozi. It's yummy and lots of Chinese like eating it.

Nancy: It looks like half a moon. How do you make it?

Liu Tao: Oh, it's easy.

Nancy: Really? Could you teach me?

Liu Tao: Of course. Look at this. It's filling (饺子馅). I cut up some vegetables and meat and put them in a bowl.

Next, I add some salt and oil, and mix them together.

Nancy: It smells good. What should we do next?

Liu Tao: Look at this. It's wrapper (饺子皮). Put a spoon of the filling on a wrapper and fold the wrapper around the filling.

Nancy: OK. Let me try. Err ... Why? Your jiaozi is cute, but mine is ugly.

Liu Tao: Never mind. Let's do it again.

(After some minutes, Nancy can make jiaozi too. They make lots of jiaozi together)

Liu Tao: Now, let's put jiaozi in the boiling water.
